Hurricane Matthew

Evacuations

- Mandatory evacuation orders remain in effect for coastal counties in Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

Shelters

- FEMA reports a total of 226 shelters are open with 32,675 occupants
  - Florida – 146 Shelters (20,691 occupants)
  - Georgia – 18 Shelters (11,371 occupants)
  - South Carolina – 62 Shelters (613 occupants)

National Hurricane Center

- Hurricane Matthew has weakened to a Category 3 hurricane and is forecast to move along the east coast of the Florida peninsula through tonight, and near the coasts of Georgia and South Carolina on 10/08/16. As of 2300 PDT, Hurricane Matthew was located approximately 80 miles southeast of Cape Canaveral, Florida and was moving northwest at 14 (+1) mph.

WIND: Maximum sustained winds are 120 mph, with higher gusts. (Category 3 on the Saffir-Simpson Hurricane Wind Scale).

RAINFALL: Total rainfall of 6 to 12 inches with isolated amounts up to 15 inches are forecast along coastal east-central Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina, mainly today through 10/08/16. Significant flooding is expected over portions of northeast Florida and southeast Georgia through the weekend as a result of the combination of both storm surge/tidal flooding and freshwater impacts..

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Weak to moderate Santa Ana winds will produce significant drying and warming through Saturday, creating critical fire weather conditions. A Fire Weather Watch and Red Flag Warnings have been issued for portions of Southern California.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/www\_bc\_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Winds will weaken this afternoon but are expected to become a bit stronger overnight into tomorrow morning. Dry and unseasonably warm weather will be in place today through Sunday as the high pressure holds over the region with the warmest inland areas' afternoon highs from about 85-90. An unsettled weather pattern will develop next week as first a weakening trough approaches the coast later Monday and temperatures start to cool off. The details of the rest of the week are rather uncertain, but for now it appears a stronger trough will be off shore Tuesday and move ashore with some precipitation Wednesday. Even more precipitation may arrive next Thursday. Another round of widespread, significantly wetting rainfall amounts are possible the latter half of next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Weak offshore winds will continue tonight into Saturday before cooler, onshore flow resumes Saturday night into Sunday. The offshore winds will result in temperatures reaching the 80s in the valleys and lower foothills today. Today and Saturday will be much warmer and drier with valley and foothill temperatures reaching the 90s from Monterey County all the way south into interior sections of San Diego County. Minimum relative humidity (RH) will be in the single digits this afternoon and again Saturday afternoon. Expect poor recovery tonight. Higher RH and cooler temperatures will slowly return early next week. By next Tuesday, expect near to slightly below normal temperatures as another trough impacts northern sections of the state. No precipitation is expected through the period.
